

Brian Wick

Trustee of InfoAge

Brian Wick has held blue-chip business management and leadership positions for over 25 years. A veteran, he continues to serve the military community and in public safety.

An experienced communications professional, Brian has taken assignments in Japan, Korea, Mexico and the United States. He has helped market a wide range of domestic and internationally manufactured chemicals, satellites, flight components, controls and switches, and communications hardware. In the financial-services private sector, Brian successfully marketed insured bond funds, recordkeeping platforms, defined contribution, pension risk transfer and defined benefits to retail and institutional consumers.

Brian began communications work with Gannett Publications, first with Times-Beacon Newspapers and then The Asbury Park Press. He also wrote for The Coast Star. He formed his own marketing and communications practice, helping small businesses and politicians with sales, advertising and other communications. Brian was published in Vital Speeches of the Day with an address for a client who spoke to the European Union. He has worked directly for two Fortune 100's, helping senior leadership and product managers with digital, print, advertising, shareholder, financial disclosure and other critical marketing and communications.

A military veteran, Brian enlisted in the U.S. Army as a Combat Engineer, completing one campaign to disarm Iraq's Republican Guard and one in Kuwait's oil fields, during the first Persian Gulf War in the 1st Infantry Division. He has held leadership positions at VFW Post 1838 in Manasquan, first as Junior Vice Commander then as Senior Vice Commander. He led the Post's recent efforts to successfully establish an Auxiliary, driving membership to more than 100 men and women.

He has combined his military and corporate experience with a passion to support the military community, and manages a program to help veterans and military spouses make the transition into the corporate environment, particularly in the technology industry as it supports financial services. The program funds and works with other like-minded organizations, including those to address poverty and underserved populations.

Brian is an elected Fire Commissioner in Manasquan. He is a volunteer Firefighter, Public Safety Diver and SAFE Boat 25 Operator and Crew Member.

Brian holds a Master's in Business Administration from Centenary University and a Bachelor of Arts degree in Political Science and History from Monmouth University. He has three children and lives in Manasquan, NJ with his wife--NJ's Foundation for Sarcoidosis Research
